"I'm Sorry"

intentional

Article Written By: juli

It is just two little words.

Two little words of healing. Two little words of humility.

Two little words said with intent to reconcile,
no hidden agenda, no airs.

These two little words can put back together.
They can unite where before there was a fight.
They can put more souls in heaven.

What is with us today? Why can't we just own up to our own mistakes?

Do we hate humanity so much that we cannot humble ourselves for someone else?

Is it really that horrible to admit we were wrong?

Aren't a resolved conflict and a clear conscience more valuable?

Do you realize how much healing would take place if everyone would just apologize for the wrong they have done or may have done?

Isn't a long relationship worth owning up to being wrong? Repair your friendship with those two little words. And be sincere about it.

Just stop and think. We NEED each other. We need to know other people care for us in turn they need to know you care about them.

You were wrong and you know it. Own it. Fix it like a mature human being.

"I'm sorry."

See. It is just that simple

"My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth." 1 John 3:18
